Appendix: AI fitting room, free and paid

The fitting room uses Decart's Anywear (an outside AI company). We integrate it and show you how it works; you decide whether to use it, and if you choose the paid plan you pay Decart directly. It can be switched off at any time.

	Free (trial)	Paid
Cost	Free during Decart's beta	Quoted by Decart based on usage (no public price list)
Who can use it	Limited: Decart says the trial "won't serve your whole traffic". On the mock-up each visitor gets about 6 tries	Open to every visitor
At busy times	Users have reported waiting in a queue	Without the trial limits
Products	The try-on button only shows on pieces the AI renders well	Decart runs a quality pass on the whole catalogue
How long	May end when Decart's beta ends	Per the agreement with Decart

Estimating the paid cost

Decart hasn't published a price for the store version. As a reference, its published developer rate is US$0.02 per second of try-on, about US$1.20 per minute. For example, 100 tries a month at 1 minute each is about US$120/month; 300 tries at 1.5 minutes is about US$540/month. These are estimates only; the real price comes from Decart, and we'll ask them based on Phan's visitor numbers.

• The fitting room shows style, colour and cloth on the visitor. Real measurements are still taken at the villa.

• The visitor's camera feed is processed by Decart; the site shows a notice before the camera turns on.

• You can start on the free version, see whether customers use it, then decide on the paid plan.
